It can be confusing for someone to try and work out whether the name calling is banter or bullying. A young person going through something like this might feel intimidated or feel under pressure not to make a fuss because others are saying it is just a joke. If it is a one off incident then it may be that it is banter. However, if the name calling becomes persistent and regular, then this is bullying.

Regardless of hitting delete, once something is posted online it gets its own unique URL (the <https://>) which means that it can stay on cyberspace even if you hit delete. Nothing is secret in cyber space and something you write now might damage your job prospects in future because many employers search the internet before they take people on.

Confide in someone you trust so you can get help to get it stopped. Take screenshots and save any messages, pictures or posts with dates and times. Block the bullies so they cannot contact you. Don't respond or retaliate as it could make matters worse. Ensure all your personal data like logins and passwords are private and check your privacy settings. Don't post anything online that leaves you vulnerable to online bullying. Report it, even if it is not happening to you.

It is not always easy to spot the signs of bullying as it is not always physical and obvious. Emotional, verbal and online bullying can often leave scars that people don't see. It is important not to assume the person is ok as they may be putting up a front, inside a person may be feeling humiliated, low self-esteem, anxious and much more. They may also be harming themselves in physically too, like self-harm, eating disorders, etc.
